LESSONS OF GATHERING

SUMMARY OF DR. SUZZALO'S AD-DRESS ON LITERATURE.

The fourteenth annual gathering of the teachers of the state was concluded on Friday last in Provo, and the bands of educators returned to their homes. The gathering was the largest ever held in the Garden City, and the Provo people may well be proud of the manner in which they handled the throng. Every effort had been made to make the affair memorable in every way, and the newspaper reports, hurried as they were, gave no time for comment on the scale and quality of the manner of the scale and quality of the data of the scale and quality of the sca

The convention taught some needed lessons to the members, and the hope was expressed that some steps would be taken to change the order of holdwas expressed that some steps would be taken to change the order of holding the conventions. Not only is it considered a serious infringement of the teachers to put in two days or more of it in serious study, but it is manifestly unfair that a portion of the teaching force of the state should receive a salary for so doing while others are expected to go and stand the additional expense without compensation. There would seem to be a part of the school term.

When prominent educators are brought to the state from afar it is to be presumed that they have something of help and of inspiration to offer to tall the teachers, and it is hardly fair, either, to them or to the teachers to the teachers to the teachers to put in two days or more of it in serious study, but it is manifestly unfair that a portion of the teaching force of the state should receive a salary for so doing while others are expected to go and stand the additional expense without compensation. There would seem to be not reason why the convention should not be a part of the school term.

ty of the speaker, it was as follows:

"The tendency of the modern school to become an institution designed to give more than an appreciation and understanding of knowledge is clearly manifested by the growth of the expressive subjects, in recent school curricula. Within the past decade or two the expressive subjects have come to occurry a pends upon a clear and fixed experiences.

than in previous years. The importance of expression in the learning process has become quite obvious from the very beginning of the experiment in the use of active subjects. There is no final test of the rightness of feeling or of the accuracy of thinking like the action or the expression which is the result of these. We are realizing more as we proceed that the school is to turn out men not only with appreciative power, but men with the ability to influence life through expressive power. Thus far our efforts have been fragmentary, however, and it seems a meet time to consider from a unified and broad point of view the expressive work of the school, and more particularly for the purposes of this address to show the place of the story and the poem.

Types of Expression.

There are many types of expression to learn process has become quite obvious from the very experience one with sound symbols, the other with sight symbols. In any written language the symbols, the eye and is expressed through the final process of this address to show the place of the story and the poem.

Types of Expression.

There are many types of expression the symbol enters the ear and becomes expressed through the vocal organs. The poem and the story as potent factors in oral reading and oral language concerns the symbols understood by the ear and expressed through the throat, tongue, lips and other physical organs of speech.

The music was of a high order, and it was arranged entirely by the local committees. The homes of Provo were thrown open, and the business men vied with one another in their efforts to make things agreeable for the visitors.

And the effort was not without compensation. The gathering numbered between 1,400 and 1,500, and a number of them were spenders. This was evidenced by the fact that the postmaster sold $125 worth of 1-cent postage stamps and a proportionate number of postal cards, all of them showing the best of Provo from a picturesque view, were sold in the various shops.

'In the foregoing analysis it has been suggested that there are two functions even to oral language. One is the function of appreciation and the other is the function of expression. Appreciating is listening and understanding. Expression is thinking and speaking. Between these two functions there seems to be an established relationship. Our appreciations usually precede and envelop our expressiveness. Clear expression demands as a basis clear appreciation. Poisons, humors and germs from various sources often get into the blood, and then this great life-stream becomes a source of infection and disease, instead of a nourishing, health-sustaining fluid. Heredity is likewise an important factor, regulating the quality of the blood. Some persons are born with tainted blood from diseased ancestry, and Scrofula in one of its numerous forms is sure to crop out some time in life. Not only poisons in the blood are responsible for disease, but when the circulation is run down and becomes poor and weak in quality, then we see the effect in a general bad condition of health, such as weakness, sallow complexions, boils, and various skin eruptions. All blood troubles require a tonic and blood purifier, and none
